OCLC Number: (OCoLC)45199143 Subject: Accrual basis accounting. Excerpt: . . . Executive Summary differ, especially in the role each plays in the budget process. The U. S. Congress is an independent and separate branch of government that takes a more active role in resource allocation decisions than the parliaments in GAOs case study countries. Many important decisions that, in the United States, are debated during the annual appropriations process occur in case study countries before the budget is presented for parliamentary approval. Also, most case study countries generally deal with the approval of obligations through executive branch controls whereas in the United States congressional approval (budget authority) is required before executive branch departments can obligate funds. Further, most case study countries used purely cash reporting for budgeting before adopting accrual budgeting. In contrast, the United States obligation-based budgeting already captures many obligations not apparent in a purely cash system. These differences are likely to influence perspectives on the trade-offs associated with the use of accrual budgeting, particularly in terms of accountability and legislative control issues. Any reform effort should begin with consideration of the overarching managerial and control objectives embodied within the United States institutional system. While concerns have been raised that the U. S. obligation-based system may not adequately reflect all long-term commitments or properly align budget cost recognition with the consumption of resources, it offers other benefits in terms of up-front control of obligations. Thus, the challenge for the U. S. system is to see if accrual concepts can be adapted to address the unique budgetary needs of the Congress as well as the executive branch. The..
