Chapter. 1. - Summary 7 less laws are changed. Proposed highway State each route, such as right-of-way alignment, number of reauthorization legislation for 1991 would make it stops, real estate costs, and projected ridership. How-easier for States to make highway rights-of-way available, only high-speed rail technology is proven and able to other surface transportation systems, including ready for intercity service now. For the future, maglev promises faster speeds, quicker acceleration, the ability-high-speed rail and maglev, and would permit funding from the Highway Trust Fund under certain circumstances to ascend steeper grades, less noise, and better stances. energy efficiency than rail at similar high speeds. Tiltrotor Systems maglev and high-speed trains would generate a variety of social advantages and costs that must be considered in public policies for these technologies. avoid ground access or airport congestion by providing High-speed trains operating on grade-separated tracks point-to-point service to conveniently located landing are very safe; no passengers have been fatally injured facilities, feeder flights into airports where runway in either Japanese or French rail systems in high-speed capacity is saturated, and service to new points as service. High-speed rail and maglev are relatively unnecessary without the need for runways. tiltrotor passenger energy efficient at their operating speeds and, because passengers and some aspects of the aviation system could they use electricity for power, are not dependent on benefit from these services.
