Not illustrated. 1908 Excerpt: .small and apparently inert mass, which had remained unchanged since July, 1907. This growth was reported to be a mixed sarcoma. Photographs and casts of the condition before and after treatment were shown as well as the exhibition of the patient. The third patient presented was a little girl, who, when she came under Dr. Abbe s observation, had a tumor which occupied the entire parotid region extending beneath the jaw, upward to the zygoma and forward on the cheek. It was regarded as an angiosarcoma. An attempt was made to excise it, but this had to be abandoned on account of its extent, vascularity and nerve involvement. Application of strong radium in a glass tube was thereupon made. At one time the tube was pushed into the center of the cavernous angioma and left over night. This produced great reaction, high fever and tenderness in the region of the growth. Since then the mas had become flattened so that it was now scarcely noticeable and apparently nothing remained but the shrunken fibrous remnant of the huge softtumor. The next patient was a boy with an extensive tuberculoma of the skin of the hand and foot which had been unsuccessfully treated for seven years by every possible means, including liquid air. After a few applications of radium the lesions disappeared. One year later, soft, pink, cicatricial skin remained, as witnessed. The next patient was a man with a round-celled sarcoma of two-thirds of the eyelid, who...
