Excerpt: . . . make its opinion and degrees sought after by schools, conservatories and private teachers. Moreover, I have heard that the old question of Music Extension will come up again; the question upon which you, Mr. Editor, wrote so clearly upon several occasions. But what force can there be in a body so small as this, without any local constituency in the smaller cities of the country for carrying out a work requiring a consensus of professional co-operation more ample than that even in the Chautauqua Literary Circle, and the University Extension Society It seems to me that this action of disorganizing the American College of Musicians has been somewhat hasty on the part of its officers; and it is doubtful in my mind whether they had any right to take it, or any necessity for taking it. The complaint of the Regents lay wholly against the use of the term College. Any society, as I understand it, in New York or in any other state, has the right to formulate its own conditions of membership, and to administer tests of any character for ascertaining fitness. When the candidate is passed by our boards he is simply a member or associate of the College; and his relation to the community with respect to authority for teaching depends entirely upon his own force of character, and the local estimation placed upon the College certificates. But if this action of ours was illegal in New York so long as...
